

One Health EJP Final School 2022

Sustainability in One Health: how can it be achieved?

Date: 5th - 7th December, 2022

Location: Online

Audience: Early career researchers (post-doc, PhD, junior staff members) throughout the EU and from neighbouring areas involved in all aspects of One Health including biological as well as environmental hazards

Fee: free

Aims of the Final School

Over the last five years, the One Health EJP has facilitated transdisciplinary and cross-sector research collaborations to better prevent, predict, detect and respond to global health threats of the 21st Century. Our successful research outputs and education events have demonstrated the importance of communication and coordination between the different partners to advance One Health. This Final School aims to communicate how the outcomes from our innovative and visionary European programme can benefit the future of One Health. The legacy of the OHEJP will continue beyond 2023 through the sustainability plan. Our One Health future will be driven by students and early career researchers, who are invited to this event.

The programme will include:

- One Health topics to which sustainability is being applied. In relation to foodborne zoonotic pathogens and antimicrobial resistance being transmitted between humans and animals, or through the environment, and key emerging health threats.
- How policies can shape the future of One Health.
- The importance of education and training activities for the future generations of One Health professionals.
- The relevance of effective communication and open research for multisectoral collaborations.

Am I Eligible?

Bachelor's, Masters and PhD Students and early career researchers (e.g. post-doctoral researchers, new lecturers etc.) from both within the One Health EJP consortium and external to the consortium are eligible to apply for the Final School. Applicants should have experience in a relevant field of veterinary, medical or biological sciences (including environment and food sciences).

How can I apply?

To apply, please complete the application form here.
The deadline to apply is 30th November 2022.